Winter is here.

Boston is under a winter weather advisory and a hazardous weather outlook until Tuesday morning, according to weather.gov, which warns of "Snow. Additional snow accumulations of 4 to 9 inches. Winds gusting as high as 40 mph."

On Monday, the area was expecting 3 to 5 inches of snow and sleet accumulation. Even though the city is expected to get the least amount of snow in the state, they will be facing an additional 2 to 4 inches on Tuesday.

Due to the weather, the city is encouraging commuters to use caution when traveling during the storm. Mayor Walsh said in a press release, "We are encouraging residents to use caution when traveling, assist older neighbors and those who are disabled, and keep up with the shoveling of their property throughout the storm."

Walsh added, "The City of Boston and our Public Works are well prepared for this storm that's coming Boston's way, and we ask that residents and businesses shovel their sidewalks and walkways, to ensure safety for all. Please remember to abide by the snow rules and be safe."

Since no snow emergency has been declared at this time, everything is expected to remain open at regular hours.

To stay updated, residents are encouraged to sign up for emergency notifications through AlertBoston and to utilize Boston's 311 call center.

Rules on clearing snow:

- Property owners must fully clear snow, sleet, and ice from sidewalks and curb ramps abutting the property within three hours after the snowfall ends or three hours after sunrise if the snow ends overnight. Curb and pedestrian ramps to the street should be cleared fully and continually over the duration of the storm to ensure accessibility for individuals with disabilities. If a storm will last over an extended period of time, property owners are asked to continually check ramps abutting their property for compliance. Failure to comply can result in a fine issued by PWD's Code Enforcement Division.

- Removal of snow, ice from a private property to the street or sidewalk is prohibited and can result in a fine issued by PWD's Code Enforcement Division.

- Do not throw snow onto the street. Fines associated with improper removal of snow can be found online.

ISTOCK

Safety Tips:

- Remember to keep catch basins and fire hydrants clear. For a map of catch basins and fire hydrants, visit the Boston Water and Sewer website.
- Shoveling snow requires significant exertion; please be cautious and pay attention to symptoms. Stop if you feel chest pain, shortness of breath, lightheaded, nauseous/vomiting. Call 911 if those symptoms do not resolve quickly when you stop exertion.

- Snow piles can make navigating intersections dangerous for walkers and drivers, please take extra care when turning corners with snow piles that might limit visibility.
- Carbon Monoxide poisoning is a concern during winter weather, especially with the use of generators. Residents should be sure to use their home heating systems wisely and safely, and have a working carbon monoxide detector on each floor of your home. Call 911 immediately if you suspect carbon monoxide poisoning.

- Sitting in a car while idling can be deadly if the tailpipe is blocked. Do not let children sit in an idling car while shoveling. Clear any household exhaust pipes of snow. For example, gas exhaust from heating system or dryer.
- Please check on neighbors, especially the elderly and those with disabilities.

National encyclopedia born as Putin pans Wikipedia

2 Russia is to set up a new online site for its national encyclopedia after President Vladimir Putin said Wikipedia was unreliable and should be replaced. The move will ensure people can find "reliable information that is constantly updated on the basis of scientifically verified sources of knowledge," a government resolution said. Putin last month proposed replacing the crowd-sourced online encyclopedia Wikipedia with an electronic version of the Great Russian Encyclopedia – the successor to the Soviet Union's main encyclopedia. "This, at any rate, would be reliable information offered in a modern form," Putin said. REUTERS

Trump grants temp reprieve for N.Irish ex-militant

3 The Trump administration has granted a rare reprieve from deportation to a former member of an Irish Republican militant group who had been convicted of crimes committed during the political and sectarian conflict in Northern Ireland in the 1980s, a U.S. official said on Monday. Democratic and Republican lawmakers from New York had lobbied for Malachy McAllister to be allowed to stay in the United States despite a 2017 immigration policy change that raised the legal bar for temporary relief for deportation. He had been due to be deported last week. McAllister was convicted in Northern Ireland of charges related to serving as a lookout in a 1981 attack on a police officer in Northern Ireland, according to U.S. court documents. He also was convicted of plotting to shoot and kill another officer. He was jailed for seven years but freed on early release in 1985. REUTERS

Don't fiddle while the planet burns, U.N. chief warns climate summit

Are we nearing the point of no return?

The world must choose hope over surrender in the fight against climate change, U.N. secretary-general Antonio Guterres said on Monday, warning at a summit in Madrid that governments risked sleepwalking past a point of no return.

The latest round of annual negotiations to bolster the 2015 Paris Agreement to curb global warming began against a backdrop of unusually severe weather disasters this year, from fires in the Arctic, Amazon and Australia to intense tropical hurricanes.

"Do we really want to be remembered as the generation that buried its head in the sand, that fiddled while the planet burned?" Guterres told the opening session of the two-week gathering, held in a hangar-like conference center in the Spanish capital.

"One is the path of surrender, where we have sleepwalked past the point of no return," he said. "The other option is the path of hope. A path of resolve, of sustainable solutions."

Delegates aim to tackle an important outstanding issue from the Paris accord: rules on carbon trading that are seen as vital to kick-starting faster action to reduce emissions.

But the summit is also being watched as a broader test of international commitment to the kind of major changes in energy, transport and industry that scientists say are needed to wean the world off fossil fuels fast enough to avoid catastrophe.

Mark Montegriffo, a journalism student, had traveled from London to join several dozen protesters with the Extinction Rebellion movement who gathered outside the venue to demand bolder action by the officials cloistered inside.

"It would take a radical transformation, but it starts on the streets, it starts here," the 22-year-old said.

The Paris process faces a moment of truth next year when governments are due to unveil more ambitious proposals to cut the production of planet-warming gases in time to stop the climate careering past dangerous tipping points.

Under existing pledges, the world is on course for the kind of temperature rises that could threaten the stability of industrial societies and lay waste to swathes of the developing world in the second half of the century, scientists say.

While a fast-growing youth-led climate activist movement is pressuring leaders to act, U.S. President Donald Trump's decision to begin withdrawing from the accord last month has cast a shadow over the latest round of negotiations.

Nevertheless, U.S. House of Representatives Speaker Nancy Pelosi, who is leading impeachment proceedings against Trump in Washington, appeared at the talks on Monday with assurances that Congress was committed to ambitious climate action.

"By coming here we want to say to everyone we are still in, the United States is still in," Pelosi told reporters at the talks, flanked by Democratic Congressional representatives.

Spain's acting Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez, whose government stepped in to host the summit after unrest erupted in Chile, the original venue, urged delegates to take ambitious action to preserve the "fragile balance" of life on Earth.

"No one can independently pull out of this challenge," Sanchez told delegates. "There is no wall high enough to protect any country from this challenge, however powerful they are." REUTERS

Amazon pulls Auschwitz Christmas decorations from site

Sellers violated Amazon's guidelines for permitted sales.

Amazon has withdrawn from sale products decorated with images of the former Auschwitz concentration camp in Poland including Christmas decorations after a complaint from the organization that preserves the site as a memorial.

The Auschwitz museum drew attention to the products on its Twitter account on Sunday, calling them "disturbing and disrespectful," and asked Amazon to remove them. On Monday, Amazon said it had done so.

"All sellers must follow our selling guidelines and those who do not will be subject to action, including potential removal of their account," an Amazon spokesman said.

Amazon's guidelines for sellers include the following line: "Amazon does not allow products that promote, incite or glorify hatred, violence, racial, sexual or religious intolerance or promote organizations with such views."

The guidelines also state: "We'll also remove listings that graphically portray violence or victims of violence."

Between 1940 and 1945, about 1.5 million people, mainly Jews, were killed by the Nazis at the Auschwitz-Birkenau camp in German-occupied Poland.

The Auschwitz museum said the products in question were still available on e-commerce marketplace Wish and called for their removal there too.

A Wish spokesperson said: "These items are completely inappropriate and should not have been listed by sellers on our platform. We are removing them as a matter of urgency."

The products include ceramic ornaments, computer mouse pads and bottle tops decorated with images of the camp, made by a company which produces a wide range of souvenirs like fridge magnets and mugs featuring images of tourist destinations.

Reuters was not immediately able to contact the maker of the decorations.

"These items are completely inappropriate and should not have been listed by sellers on our platform. We are removing them as a matter of urgency."

A Wish spokesperson

"We consider this rather an isolated incident," Pawel Sawicki, press officer for the Auschwitz Memorial, told Reuters by email. "What seems to be an issue is that more and more producers use some image-grabbing software and place hundreds of images on their products hoping to find customers."

Lucy Dacus on confronting stage fright, the wisdom of Lana Del Rey and working on her most honest music yet

The talented singer-songwriter will be in town this week.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Lucy Dacus is busy but in the best way possible. When I caught up with the 24-year-old Richmond, Virginia singer-songwriter she had taken advantage of her first day off from shows in a long stretch to sleep in until the early afternoon. Dacus and her band have been on the road for nearly two years straight in support of her second album, 2018's fantastic "Historian," and lately she has been playing some of the biggest venues of her career. And while this is all amazing, she can use all of the rest she can get.

"It has been incredible," Dacus explains. "It's kind of tiring. But, of course something like this would take work. It does take sacrifices and work but it's really worth it I think."

Such sacrifices include being on the road more often than not, and the pressures around playing to larger and larger audiences each night. During a recent appearance on the Talkhouse podcast, Dacus opened up during her conversation with Death Cab For Cutie guitarist Dave Depper about her sometimes crippling stage fright. In their conversation, the two musicians talked about the wonders of using beta blockers to help reduce their heart rates and let them be more in the moment instead of caught in the headlights. I ask Dacus if these feelings have subsided at all after touring so heavily in support of "Historian."

"It has but it still happens," she says. "Our last show was a couple of days ago in Mexico City. We had never played Mexico and I was walking out on stage it hit me. I was like, 'Wow, I'm here. I never thought I would get here...' and I got stricken with fear. The weight of the moment ... I kind of got lifted from the situation and viewed it from above. That was a little bit dissociative. So I was a little freaked out and didn't have time to take a beta blocker. I think knowing that I have them just puts me at ease."

"It's nice to just admit that everybody deals with stuff like this," she adds. "It's chemical. I think there's a part of me that's like, 'No, I should be able to get over this myself. I should be able to have control over my brain and I should be stronger in some way.' But, I think that that really keeps people from figuring out solutions for simple problems."

While the venues have been getting much larger as Dacus and her band continue to tour, nothing has been quite as big as when she was asked personally by Lana Del Rey to open one of her "Norman F-king Rockwell" tour dates in Chicago. Dacus jumped at the opportunity and was even asked to perform her song "Night Shift" with Del Rey onstage.

"That was another wild one," says Dacus of that surreal night. "She hit me up on Instagram three days before the show just to say, 'Hey, I'm a fan and I was wondering if you would want to open any of the upcoming shows.' I had to go to Mexico, like I said, so it was really only her Chicago show. She is so sweet. I'm a fan, especially of the new record. I think it's her best. It was really nice to see someone at that level be so generous and open. To me, but also to her fans. Hours after the show was over, she went outside and people were waiting by her bus. She was like 'Oh my gosh' and hugged everyone and took photos with them. I told her, 'I can't believe you have so much energy for your fans,' and she was like, 'well, to have one fan is a miracle.' I got choked up because that was so beautiful to hear from someone who has millions of fans. She knows the value of just one person having your side and being grateful for your work. I learned a lot from her in just two days."

Aside from her own music, Dacus was also a part of one of 2018's best musical surprises as one third of the indie-rock supergroup boygenius with Julien Baker and Phoebe Bridgers. The group released one fantastic EP last year to coincide with a month long tour the three young artists had previously booked before starting the project. While the formation of the group was born purely out of coincidence, it helped each of them to grow as artists and musicians.

"I think every one of us flexed different muscles and realized that we are more capable than we thought we were individually. Especially being the directors of our own projects, you kind of have to discover everything yourself. For this, we were helping each other discover our own abilities. Whenever I talk about boygenius, it sounds so corny. But honestly, it was! It was really corny. It was really sweet. We were loving each other all of the time," says Dacus. "We only toured for that one month and haven't since and have no plans to. I think we all regard that time as a bit of a miracle. Whatever it felt like in the crowd, I think it felt that way times ten for us."

Dacus is making plans for a new album release sometime next year.

Pats' offense in a giant rut

The Patriots have averaged just 19.8 points per game in their last five games.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

There remains faith in New England that Tom Brady and the Patriots offense will figure this thing out ... but they had better hurry up.

We're now in the month of December, typically the time when the Pats start peaking – but one could easily make the case that Brady and company are playing their worst football of the season right now.

Sunday night's 28-22 loss to Houston was a root canal of a game to watch as Brady struggled to move the ball against what is a below-average Texans defense. The Houston defense is a putrid 28th in the NFL in passing yards allowed – giving up 262.9 yards per game.

TB12 did throw for 326 yards in the affair, but anyone who watched the game knew that the struggle was real. Brady connected on just 24 of 47 passes and finished with a blah 85.9 passer rating.

Brady again didn't put much faith in his young and new receivers as he targeted rookie N'Keal Harry just once (an incompletion) and Mohamed Sanu only five times (Sanu finished the game with three catches for 14 yards).

Sanu was supposed to offer Brady something of a big, physical security blanket over the middle of the field but so far in his Patriots tenure he has been largely ineffective. The wide receiver's best game with the Pats so far was actually the Baltimore loss as Brady targeted him 14 times and Sanu hauled in 10 of them for 81 yards and a touchdown.

Tom Brady and the Patriots were dealt their second loss of 2019 this past Sunday in Houston. GETTY IMAGES

The Ravens game is the only outing so far that Sanu has entered the end zone with the Pats as well.

In the Houston game, Brady clearly only felt comfortable with two of his pass-catchers: Julian Edelman (six catches, 106 yards, one touchdown) and James White (eight catches, 98 yards, two touchdowns).

When the Patriots offense is humming and at its peak, Brady is looking the way of numerous receivers throughout each game. On Sunday night, the

Bill Belichick. GETTY IMAGES

G.O.A.T. looked Edelman and White's way a combination of 23 times. The rest of his receiving corps? A combined 23 times.

Frosty handshake

Bill Belichick is a world-class grudge holder and it now looks like former Pats offensive coordinator and current Texans head coach Bill O'Brien is on BB's naughty list. Belichick did not so much as look at O'Brien in the postgame handshake Sunday night, causing many to suggest that Belichick is still steaming over O'Brien and the Texans trying to steal away Patriots Director of Player Personnel Nick Caserio this past offseason.

The Pats wound up filing tampering charges against the Texans because of their pursuit, and O'Brien may now find himself in the company of Eric Mangini – a former Pats assistant who is now dead to Belichick because of past slights.

Great value in NFL Futures betting

What's true now won't be true in February.

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

By virtue of the Ravens eking out a win over the 49ers, and with the Patriots falling to the Texans, Baltimore is now the favorite to win Super Bowl LIV at most sportsbooks. Here are the latest Super Bowl odds at DraftKings Sportsbook.

Ravens +250
Patriots +400
Saints +500
49ers +750
Chiefs +1100
Seahawks +1100
Packers +1600
Vikings +2000
Cowboys +2500
Texans +2500
Bills +4000

GETTY IMAGES

Eagles +6000

Now is a great time to value bet on Super Bowl futures as recent NFL history suggests that what is true in early December is rarely true in early February.

Consider that the Patriots lost back-to-back games last December and the odds looked like this heading into the 2018 postseason:

Saints +250
Rams +400
Chiefs +470
Patriots +650
Bears +700

And two years ago after a shaky December, Nick Foles and the Eagles had 60-1 odds to win it all heading into the playoffs.

Good futures plays here are the Patriots at +400 (they always figure it out in January), the 49ers at +750 (they were right in that game at Baltimore and could still get a first round bye) and the Titans as a longshot at +6600.

We've loved Tennessee's potential all year (they were our pre-season sleeper pick) and they're finally rolling now that they have a competent quarterback. Ryan Tannehill and company have ripped off three wins in a row and they control their own destiny in the AFC South with two games against the Texans this month.

Boston College earns bowl berth

Boston College (+8) became bowl eligible this past Saturday with a 26-19 road upset of Pittsburgh.

While both teams were able to move the ball, Pittsburgh won total yardage 394-387 and yards-per-play 6.1 to 4.9. The Eagles played the much cleaner game. BC didn't turn the ball over a single time. Pittsburgh committed four turnovers, three lost fumbles and one interception.

The victory moved the Eagles to 6-6 on the season, qualifying them for a postseason bowl berth if they receive an invitation. Last year's team earned a bid to the First Responder Bowl vs. Boise State, only to see the game cancelled by bad weather.

BC ended the regular season 7-5 against the spread ... broken down as follows: 1-3 ATS as favorites, 6-2 ATS as underdogs (though the non-covers were in humbling blow-out losses at Clemson and Notre Dame), 3-3 ATS at home, 4-2 ATS on the road.

Its largest cover was by 34 points in a 58-27 win at Syracuse as a three-point underdog. Its biggest miss was by 42.5 points in a 48-24 loss to Kansas laying 18.5 points.

Boston College's 4-4 straight up record in Atlantic Coast Conference play was good enough for a third-place tie in the Atlantic Division with Wake Forest and Florida

State. Atlantic winner Clemson will be a heavy favorite over Coastal winner Virginia in the ACC Championship Saturday at Bank of America Stadium in Charlotte, N.C. (ABC, 7:30 p.m.)

VSIN will talk more about handicapping bowl games later this month. The key to finding value in BC's bowl game will center on the opponent's rush defense. The Eagles are a smart bet to cover as underdogs vs. soft defenses, but a bad bet against good rush defenses that can also pile up points offensively.

Are you going places? Or looking for places to go?

Managing your benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH) alone may not be enough. If you are on BPH therapy and visiting the bathroom frequently, you may have an overactive bladder (OAB).

The immediate need to 'go' interrupts your day and night – and it may not be caused by your BPH.

- Do you have to use the bathroom at least 8 times a day?
- Do you still wake up 2 or more times each night to use the bathroom?
- Do you experience a need to use the bathroom immediately (urinary urgency)?

If these symptoms disrupt your day and night, you may also have a condition called OAB.

A clinical research study is testing the safety and effectiveness of an investigational drug in men on BPH therapy experiencing OAB symptoms. Over 1000 participants in over 135 study centers across North America and Europe are expected to take part in the COURAGE Study.
